The International Library, Stockholm

Arabic, Thai, Hindi, Japanese, Latvian, Vietnamese and Swahili are among the more than 100 languages represented at the International Library in Stockholm. The library is part of Stockholm Public Library. The International Library serves as a lending centre for the country, and those who cannot visit us may turn to their local library for help to access our collections.

At the International Library you find:

- 200 000 books in more than100 languages
- staff to assist you in various languages
- fact and fiction for children and adults
- dictionaries and encyclopedias
- newspapers and magazines
- videos/DVDs
- CD-records with music from all over the world
- computers and internet services
- programs and seminars

The International Library also serves as a resource in the development of multilingual library services in Sweden. Multilingual information and material is produced in cooperation with libraries around the country for distribution via the website. In order to facilitate catalogue searches for materials in other languages, the International Library has developed a multilingual website (www.interbib.se), where books are presented in original script as well as in Latin script.

The International Library is an exciting multicultural meeting place for everyone interested in language and literature. There is an extensive activity with diverse programs such as lectures, literary seminars and language cafés, often in cooperation with external organizations and institutes. There is also the annual "International Children's Book Week" as well as conferences and special projects.
