

Come visit the library

*”With words you learn to understand.
With words you learn to explain.
And words help us to live together.”*

BENKT-ERIK HEDIN

A child who early in life gets to hear tales and stories develops a fine sense of language. Reading aloud for your children is a great way to stimulate their language skills and imagination.

You can help your children refine their language skills by listening and speaking with them. Every thing you do together will improve your children’s language skills. Read, sing, tell stories, explain, play with your children! Start when they are young, from the very first minute, because that is when the foundation for their language skills will be laid.

Use your native language with your children. Children with a well-developed native language find it easier to learn other languages.

The library has books for children of all ages. There are board books for toddlers, picture books, books with rhymes, poetry books, reference books, books with fairytales and stories.

The library has books in many languages for all ages. We would be glad to help you find what you are looking for, and borrowing books is free of charge!

The library also has books for adults on topics such as childhood illnesses, child psychology, child rearing, etc. And there are books in many languages, both for children and adults.

See you at the library!
